4. Public Comments

Cynda Rader, 212 NW Spruce, Lee's Summit, shared her comments as a resident and as a real estate and development business owner. First, she applauds the CEDC for their efforts to address the affordable housing initiative through smaller lots and ADU's.

Secondly, she has three questions regarding the proposed park impact fee being proposed.

1. Will town homes be exempt from the impact fees?
2. Some developers include pools and parks in their new subdivisions, will these areas be waived from the impact fees?
3. Is there a more equitable solution to the impact fees, such as asking the voters for a sales tax or bond issue?

Will Ruder, Home Builders Assoc., 600 E. 103rd St, KCMO, 64131, also had comments regarding the park impact fee. He did a survey with three land developers in Lee's Summit where they identified 250 acres of private recreation areas developed in single-family subdivisions since 2008 that are not included in the parks department inventory. He added there are five "L" structures in the housing market: land, labor, lumber, lending and laws. When new supply structures are implemented, it affects the other structures and reduces the ability to provide more diverse products and more diverse prices. Housing is of the utmost priority in this community and the metro. He said it stands to reason whether or not to implement a fee at this time to fund a park system that is partially funded by private entities investing in the community. Also, 2024 is a "Code Year" when the international code and fee structures are reviewed and updated. The last analysis was completed in 2018 and is done every six years.
